The Sun Will Rise Tomorrow

"Therefore I tell you, do not worry about your life, what you will eat or drink; or about your body, what you will wear. Is not life more than food, and the body more than clothes?"
Matthew 6:25 NIV

Why do we worry about minor problems when the sun is still shining, rain waters the earth, and the world goes on exactly as it should? Our personal problems may seem hugely important and overwhelming, but in the grand scheme of things our problems are irrelevant. The sun will continue to rise and set, the earth will revolve around the sun, and your problems will be unnoticed by everybody on the planet except yourself, and perhaps a few others who are closely related to you. It helps to sometimes go outside and look up at the sky to realize just how miniscule we are. Especially at night, when we can see the stars and realize that the universe is huge beyond imagination, we begin to sense how unimportant our problems are. Consider also that our lives are a brief span, a veritable knife's edge between the infinite time before our births and the equally boundless time to come after our deaths. When viewed this way, our problems seem to melt away into the infinite ocean of time and space.
