Farm animals to be allowed in some of Clinton's residential areas five than three. I'm just concerned that this is a problem that could get out of hand, if people begin to have more animals than they really need to have."

Ward 1 Alderwoman Karen Godfrey told the Board that requiring at least ten acres would prevent people who own somewhat smaller lots from using their property the way they intended.

Ward 4 Alderman Chip Wilbanks has owned farm animals in the past, and he said he never had any complaints from his neighbors.

"In the five acres, you'd have one goat or one little pig-potbellied pig- or something," said Wilbanks. "So you're not talking about a lot of animals. And I think five acres was a good solution."

Rob Logan and his wife own 143 acres on Williamson

Road. He'd been asking the Board to rezone his property from Residential Estate to Agricultural so he could legally have farm animals. He said he's okay with the amended ordinance, with one reservation: "I don't understand why they limited it to ten chickens.

But I don't believe anybody is going to go out and count them."

Logan said there are people with large lots in his part of Clinton who already have animals. But he said, with it not being legal until now, all it would have taken is one angry neighbor to turn them in.

The revised ordinance will take effect April 7. Those who have questions about this ordinance or others can contact Clinton's Department of Community Development at 601-924-2256.
