New bar on Route 36 to open up soon

By Dominik Stallings

The new bar "Family Traditions Saloon" is set to open its doors Feb. 11 at 306 E. Southline Road in Tuscola.

The bar will be open at 10 a.m. that day., a day before their Super Bowl party. Their usual hours will be 10 a.m.-1 a.m. Thursday-Saturday, and close earlier at 11 p.m. on other days.

Owner Chad Evans said the bar is full-service and will feature drink specials, happy hour and daily food specials along with their kitchen. Evans said they will serve clas-

Pizza as well. The bar is also equipped with a sic bar food appetizers and Butch's dart board and pool table. Evans said he's getting an arcade game, "Golden Tee Golf" as well. Currently, Evans is waiting on video game machines for the bar, but they're not going to be delivered for five weeks.

In the future, Evans plans to expand the outside area. He plans on having a seating section, along with a fire pit. Before opening his bar, Evans started Affordable Towing and Auto Repair. The profits he earned from that business allowed him to purchase the bar, which he is more personally invested in.

Evans' family has a long history of owning and operating bars in Mattoon. That's how he came up with the name for the bar. Evans said his family has been in the industry since the 60s. His grandfather, John Evans, owned and operated the Ice House. His father, Mike Evans, had the Illini and his uncle, Donnie Dow, still owns and operates the Triple Nickel

To open Family Traditions, Evans relied a lot on that experience from his family.

He and his father renovated and built the interior of the bar. They only need additional help from a plumber to build everything.

"They've been supportive and led me in the right place," said Evans.

Alan Shoemaker elected president of the IAAP

Alan Shoemaker, General Manager of Tuscola Stone Company, has been elected to serve as president of the Illinois Association of Aggregate Producers (IAAP). Shoemaker began his two-year term following a vote by the IAAP board of directors and members in December during the Association's annual convention in Springfield, Illinois. "I am honored to be asked to serve as president of the This organization works hard and successfully

on behalf of crushed stone, sand and gravel mining companies in Illinois. Together we can achieve so much." Alan Shoemaker said upon accepting the nomination.

Alan Shoemaker began his mining career more than 45 years ago in 1976 as an underground, union coal miner in Murdock, Illinois. He later managed a coal mine before moving to surface aggregate mining and further management roles in northern Illinois. In 2007, the Kabbes family, the quarry's owners, hired him to manage the mine in Tuscola. Shoemaker has represented Tuscola Stone Company on the IAAP board of directors since 2010.

Tuscola Stone has operated as a limestone mine on Highway 36 in Tuscola for more than fifty years and employs twenty-five men and women throughout the year. The company and Alan Shoemaker were granted the IAAP's Industry Leadership award in 2021.

According to Dan Eichholz, IAAP Executive Director, "Alan has been a strong supporter of the association and his contribution over the years serving on the Board of Directors and as a past-chair of the Safety & Health Committee, as well as other association initiatives, could not have been more valuable to our members."

The IAAP is the trade association serving the stone, sand, gravel, and non-coal industrial mineral mining industry in Illinois.

Dial-A-Ride to build vehicle storage building in Tuscola

By Dominik Stallings

Dial-A-Ride plans on constructing a storage building for its fleet in Tuscola. Specifically, across the high school at 200 S. Prairie St.

Illinois Department of Transportation awarded Dial-A-Ride a $1.1 million grant to construct the new storage building.

"It's something that is exciting that we're doing as a program," said Sanders.

The Rebuild Illinois Capital Plan invested $44.8 billion in infrastructure, $33.2 billion of which went to transportation.

Sanders said Dial-A-Ride worked with Douglas County to secure the funding for the building and with the Douglas County Engineer for the location. Sanders said Dial-A-Ride Sanders said that driving they've had to store some vehicles outside in the elements.

Sanders said Dial-A-Ride has a goal of creating a walkin area for the public, where you can pick up a phone and call them. The building would also have signage, which would help with visibility and informing people of the provided service.

Fiber optics installation in Tuscola

By Dominik Stallings

Metro Communications is currently finishing up its fiber optics installation in Tuscola. The company is currently in the process of installing internet service in individual homes.

Frontier Communications submitted their first Joint Utility Locating Information for Excavators (JULIE) locate papers in the city. Drew Hoel, city administrator, said that they originally were planning to start excavating Jan. 30, but the date was pushed back to December 2023.

Metro was the first telecommunications provider to do fiber optic construction approximately a year ago, in December

Hoel said the installation process for fiber optics can be very impactful to residents. Hoel said people reported several issues of the company hitting water and gas lines, damaging sidewalks, or cutting up people's driveways. However, a majority of those issues have been dealt with, and affected areas were repaired and replaced.

does not have any control over whether the company performs the installations or not.

North Ward elementary to participate in American Heart Challenge

By Dominik Stallings Students at North Ward Elementary School are participating in a three-week fundraiser with the American Heart Association called the American Heart Challenge. The challenge encourages students to "feel good, by doing good."

Physical Education Teacher Nolan Woller said over 100 students signed up for the fundraiser. Those students have already gathered over $6,000 since Jan. 18.

"That was a lot more than l thought we would raise, especially in that short amount of time,' said Woller.

Students have a few incentives to participate in the challenge. They can earn gifts and trinkets such as dragon-themed keychains, jump ropes, T-shirts and playground balls. A kid can earn a fitness watch if they manage to collect $1,000 in donations.

Most importantly, Woller wants the kids to learn more about the heart and how exercise can keep them healthy. Some kids have approached him and asked how they can be healthier and train their hearts since they've started the challenge.

Woller explained that the exercises aren't necessarily for their legs or arms, but rather for their heart and stamina.

"It all comes together to explain to them that it's a bigger picture," said Woller. "It relates back to PE class and why PE is so important."

In an assembly Jan. 18, the elementary school learned about Finn's story. An elementary student from Virginia underwent 18 different surgeries on his heart, 10 of which were in his first year. Thanks to research from the American Heart Association, he's been able to live an active life.

Woller said they hadn't done the American Heart Challenge for the last couple of years because they were focusing on their own fundraising efforts.
