Pritzker hits the road to sell his budget plan

By PETER HANCOCK

SPRINGFIELD - One day after delivering his budget address, Gov. JB Pritzker took to the road Thursday to rally support for his proposed "Smart Start" program to expand access to preschool and child care throughout the state.

"It is important for us to make sure that every 3- and 4-year-old in Illinois can go to preschool and has child care available to them," Pritzker said at a preschool in Springfield. "We're going to put more money into the hands of providers to expand their programs, raise quality and hire more staff."

The multi-year plan calls for spending $250 million next year to increase state funding for child care providers and for early childhood block grants administered by the Illinois State Board of Education. It also includes additional funding for early intervention programs and the Department of Human Services' home visitation program. Additional funding would be required in subsequent years.

Pritzker said the funding would create 5,000 new preschool spots in the first year, with the ultimate goal of creating 20,000 spots over the next four years.

In addition to the $250 million, Pritzker is also seeking another $100 million to expand existing child care facilities and build new ones; a $70 million increase in funding for the Child Care Assistance Program for lower-income families; $12 million for scholarships and apprenticeships to expand the child care workforce; and $1.6 million to launch a partnership with the Dolly Parton Imagination Library, an initiative to send free books to children under age 5.

"This program will help provide more equitable access to our child care system and allow for more equitable compensation for early childhood educators, regardless of the setting in which they work," Pritzker said.

Pritzker also made stops Thursday at child care and pre-K facilities in East St. Louis and Mount Vernon to rally support for his budget plan.

In Springfield, he was joined by local officials and lawmakers, including Sen. Cristina Pacione-Zayas, D-Chicago, who chairs the Senate's newly formed Early Childhood Education Committee.

"In this, we can actually change life trajectories. We are going to make generational impact," she said. "And that's what is so exciting about this because we're going to ensure equity. We're going to do this through early care and education so that everyone can thrive."

Although early childhood education and child care have popular support, Republican lawmakers raised concerns that launching new programs could lead to tax increases or cuts to other essential services in future budget years as spending pressures increase.

Pritzker, however, said the state is in a vastly improved financial condition than when he first entered office because Democrats who control the budgeting process have used surpluses in recent years to pay the state's debts and pension obligations.

"(It's) very important to note that every budget that I've put forward has had a revenue estimate associated with it that has been conservative and that we have carefully watched throughout the year," he said.

He noted that in Fiscal Year 2021, at the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, his administration cut more than $700 million in spending in response to a decrease in revenue.

UI Extension: March 13-19 is Brain Awareness Week

When someone asks you to think about health, wellness or fitness, you usually think about physical health, exercise or nutrition. As people age, they often concentrate on improving and maintaining their physical health, when they should also be working on their cognitive or brain health. Since March 13-19 is Brain Awareness Week, I would like to share a few things you can do to maintain a healthy brain. Getting enough good, quality sleep is important along with eating a heart healthy diet and exercising regularly. I have heard the phrase "what's good for the heart is good for the brain" more than once while working with this topic. Lowering your stress levels and keeping solid social connections and support also contribute to achieving good brain health. Researchers agree that challenging your brain daily is also beneficial and necessary to maintain brain health and delay cognitive decline as we get older.

You are never too young or old to start practicing brain "fitness." We need to challenge our brains with many different activities. It is essential to reach beyond what is comfortable and try new exercises and activities that are interesting, varied and make us think a little more. If an activity becomes too easy, we are not really exercising anymore, so we have to adjust the level of difficulty so that we feel we are challenged again. Not only is it important to get out of our comfort zone, but variety is also key. Our brain has many different areas to keep "fit." Just as we wouldn't be considered physically fit if we only exercised our legs, we couldn't achieve total brain health if we only focus on one area such as short-term memory. When we practice brain fitness, we also have to exercise the areas of critical thinking, spatial reasoning, and long-term memory.

Do you have to take a class to practice brain fitness? No. Will you be more likely to practice brain exercises while having a good time with others if you take a class? I continue to offer monthly Wits Fitness Brain Exercise classes in five different locations. Check out this page of our website to find out the class details <https://extension.illinois.edu/ccdms/wits-fitness-brain-exercise-classes> There is no cost for the classes, but it is usually a good idea to contact the host location to let them know you are attending. If you have any questions you can also contact me either by phone at 543-3755, or e-mail at cburcham@illinois.edu

Also during Brain Awareness Week, our Unit Facebook page will feature a brain challenge or tip each day. So don't forget to check that out at <https://www.facebook.com/>
