'Pulling Illinois out of the mud' — the story of Egyptian Trail

By Dominik Stallings

Travel by car is the preferred mode of transport for most people in Illinois nowadays. The convenience and freedom is hard to beat after all. Traveling wasn't quite so simple over 100 years ago. Horse-drawn carriages were bogged down by mud, as were the first automobiles.

James R. Wright, author of the book, "The Egyptian Trail in Illinois: A History from Chicago to Cairo," illustrates how Illinoisans organized themselves and improved their lives drastically by fixing up the roads, especially in the rural parts of the state. While we know it as a country road that connects Arcola and Tuscola, it once connected Cairo to Chicago.

Wright's book feels like going on a road trip yourself. The destination is quite clear: The Egyptian Trail, one of the earliest improved roadways in Illinois. Like any good road trip, it's not a straightforward journey; Wright leads us on a few detours here and there that give us more context to the Egyptian Trail and other historical highways.

Wright does a good job of opening a window into the lives of people in the early 20th century. We meet a lot of different people involved in the creation of the Egyptian Trail, but thanks to concise writing, the information isn't too overwhelming, nor does he stay too long on any one topic.

Wright begins the journey with the background of the Dixie and Lincoln highways, which are the more famous trails that connected Illinois to the East, West and South.

The book leans on photography, maps and advertisements to paint a picture of the era. I find the imagery helps immerse the reader. You can understand better why this trail was important to so many when you can see photographs of folks stuck in the mud. Scanned newspaper editorial pieces give a voice to the people from the past as they work to build and fund the trail.

We learn how the Egyptian Trail came to be through entrepreneurs such as Dr. Iverson A. Lumpkin and his son Dr. William Lumpkin, with Dr. Iverson being the president and Dr. William the secretary-treasurer of the Egyptian Trail Association.

We also learn of Ernest Buford Tucker, another advocate for the trail, who wrote about a road trip he took with his wife. The two had quite a few difficulties from their travels from Mattoon to Pittsburgh and show how improved road conditions might make travel safer and more convenient. Back then, they used thick travel guides which indicated routes with landmarks before highway numbering became the norm. You'd want to be sure not to miss a turn back then.

The Egyptian Trail was sectioned off in three parts: The northern section from Chicago to Paxton; the central portion
