Count Your Blessings, Not Your Problems

The world is full of problems, and not a day goes by that we don't have to deal with some of them, whether it is mechanical devices not working, or people getting sick, or problems caused by natural disasters like storms or earthquakes. And it is only natural that much of our waking hours are therefore spent fixing or cleaning up after these problems. We do well to try to prevent their damage in the first place. An ounce of prevention is indeed worth a pound of cure. There is a reason why everyone who drives a car needs auto insurance and why everyone who has a physical body needs health insurance. But if we spend too much time focusing on the problematic aspects of life our well-being will be adversely affected and we might even find that we have added unnecessarily to our problems by causing undue anxiety. We should take time every day to count our blessings, that is, to think about what we can be thankful for. A simple meal or a cup of coffee and a donut can be a real pleasure. And often the things that bring us the most joy cost nothing. A beautiful sunset or a walk in the woods with a friend or loved one can lift our spirits and have a lasting positive effect on our outlook. So focus on the positive, and even when you have some problems to solve, consider it a blessing that you have the resources to do so.
