Alapaha Conservation District offering feral swine control services

Feral swine have become increasingly detrimental in Georgia, causing significant damage to agricultural crops and natural resources throughout the state. The economic impact of damage caused by feral swine in Georgia is estimated at over $150 million. Feral swine are one of the greatest invasive species challenges facing Georgia.

The Alapaha Soil and Water Conservation District is a unit of state government that directs natural resource management programs in Berrien, Clinch, Cook, Echols, Lanier and Lowndes Counties. The Conservation District works with farmers, landowners, and with other units of government to educate and ac-

The Alapaha Conservation District offers services to help control feral swine. It actively promotes programs and practices that support the conservation, and use and development of soil, water, and related resources.

In order to offer relief to landowners struggling with the invasive feral swine, the District has acquired a feral hog trapping system and contracted with a Hog Control Custodian to operate the system throughout the District. If you are interested in hog control services, please contact the District's Hog Control Custodian, Clay Vickers, at 912-293-0262 or vickerswildlifesolutions@gmail.com.
