Remembering Vietnam Veterans March 16 and March 29

March 16: As a Vietnam veteran, March is a special month for me because—unlike most—I get to honor Veterans Day twice.

The first Veterans Day for me is March 16th. This is an extremely special day because it allows me to honor one of my Vietnam veteran sisters.

On March 16, 1955, a very special person was born—someone who would later become the greatest gift my life has ever known. That person was Vietnam Army nurse Shelley Mae Lavigne Allison.

Sadly, on February 22, 2019, Shelley succumbed to a Vietnam War-related disability and went to heaven. In a world where heroes come and go, God now has the only one I know. And yes, I still shed more than just a few tears

Quite often a certain sadness comes over me, because those who never had the opportunity to meet Shelley missed one of life's greatest joys.

March 29: March 29 is a painful day for many Vietnam veterans.

It has been almost 68 years, and there has never been a day that has gone by that I have not thought about that time in my life. And yes, still shed more than just a few tears.

Over the years, I have made several trips to The Wall and have also volunteered at the traveling Wall. It is a haunting experience. More than 58,000 names are etched there, and as you walk from one end to the other it almost feels as if you can hear whispers and feel the warmth of a gentle touch from a soldier reaching out just to say,

"Thank you for coming, and thank you for remembering me."

But the Wall is not complete—and sadly it never will be. There is simply not enough time, money, or space to build a wall large enough to include all a names of those who have and will pass away after that war from wounds that never healed.

So to all those whose names are inscribed on that Wall and for those of you who served and still bear the pain, it has been an honor to walk in the footsteps you left in the history of this great nation.

*God bless all Vietnam veterans. Welcome home.
—Johnny Allison -- in memory of Shelley*
