

"Always follow your dreams," Mason Rickle said.

"Be kind to everyone, because you never know how your choices can affect others," said Autumn Bouillon.

Savannah Walton said, "Focus on now. Don't look forward to graduating. Take your time and enjoy what's in front of you."

"Make as many memories and make as many friends as possible because once you graduate you may no longer see them and you will forget how high school went when you were in high school," said Blake Hall.

"Keep up on your work," Derreck Shulaw advised.

"Spend time with family," said Jessica Chamberlain.

Audrey Motter said, "Be willing to learn and get involved. You never know how much it could change your life."

"It goes fast," Adam Collet said.

"Have fun, it flies by before you know it! Enjoy every moment and don't take things too serious," said Kensey Korody. "Keep your friends close and don't let the little things tear anything apart!"

"Always get your work done on time. Don't procrastinate like I do," Eli Steen said.

"Get as many sashes as you can and build your resume," said Austin Boes.

Emily Weber said, "To just be yourself and don't let other people's opinions determine your actions."

"Do what you love, not what others want you to do," said Emily Brodman.

Christine Walton said,

"Make as many friends as you can and don't take your time there for granted."

"Enjoy your high school years. You only get to live it once," said Lydia Black. "Get involved in clubs or sports, participate in the spirit days, let yourself have fun. Wishing your days away will only make high school seem like an eternity."

"Take as many mandatory classes earlier than later. You'll have less classes going into your senior year. Be you and never dim your light for another person. It's gonna be a long ride but also the quickest four years of your life. Never take anything for granted, but be grateful for everything," Audrey Simons said.

"Stay on top of tasks and always try new things," said Carter Bame.

Elly Zimmerly said, "Don't be afraid to try new things. High school goes by fast. You don't want to regret not doing something later in life."

"Enjoy the little things, they might be the most important memories you have," said Gracie Luhring.
