He's been used as a punt returned in ng practice, a job he likes. "I caught punts at Louisville. I actually caught a punt against Kentucky," he said. "I played center field (in baseball). You can relate that to catching punts. You have to deal with the wind. You have got to see where the ball is going. The ball is high in the air. It is just like catching a fly ball in center field or trying to track a ball in center field. That helped me a lot. "When I played basketball and whenever I played defense (in football), I feel like basketball helped me because you're shuffling, you move laterally. In football, you use your hands. I feel like there's a lot of different movements you use that help me."

American Game and Nike Hoop Summit. However, that did not keep her from still getting on the track where she has won multiple state championships. "I have had some time off," Greenway, who missed the team's first meet, said. "I am out there running. We really have a fun team. Mom (the team's coach) gets us running hard and I like to run for Providence. I have to defend some titles but want to do better in one of my events." She has won a state championship in the 300-meter hurdles and been part of state championship relay teams. She was sixth in the long jump at last year's state meet. Kentucky coach Will Stein has shown he's a relentless recruiter and not afraid to go after some of the nation's elite players. However, he's made it clear there is one thing he will not do for any recruit. "One thing I'm not going to do is beg and plead. I'm not going to get on my hands and knees and say, 'Please come to Kentucky.' No, they better want to be here," Stein said. "They better want to play for the blue and the white. They better want to play in Kroger Field. We have a great product. "We have every resource that we need right now to go field an elite '27 class. We're building relationships and why wouldn't you want to play in this offense? Why wouldn't you want to play for me and for (offensive coordinator) Joe Sloan? I mean, you're talking about guys that have taken guys to New York (for the Heisman Trophy ceremony) recently, not 25 years ago, right now. "I've had a league (NFL) quarterback play, and guys have translated to great play in the National Football League. These players know that, who are coming on campus, and I feel like we are in a really strong position with a handful of guys." Stein has had a bevy of prospects on campus each Saturday during spring practice and likely will again Saturday for the Blue-White Game. "I do like where we're at currently with that class. We've had some elite players come through here, and not just quarterback-wise, but all positions. Now, it's our job to close," Stein said. "The best way I've recruited is on Saturdays and showing a great product on the field. So you're not going to win or lose recruiting right now, but it does build momentum towards the future."
