Reagan Phelps

Regan Phelps

Reagan Phelps is the daughter of Chad and Janet Phelps. She plans to study bioengineering at the University of Louisville Speed School.

Every successful person has people who influenced and supported them. Who would you like to give credit for helping inspire you, and what did they do to help you achieve as highly as you have?

My parents have always been my greatest influences. They've supported me in whatever I've wanted out of life, and encouraged me to try for more. Additionally, many teachers have had an impact on my life by showing that they care and are invested in my success. From assigning me challenging work to putting me in advanced classes, they showed me that I could do more.

What were the biggest obstacles you had to overcome to achieve as highly as you have?

My greatest challenge has been learning differently. There were many points when I did not understand the way a teacher taught something, so I had to teach myself through trial and error.

With success comes responsibility as a role model to those who follow you. What advice would you say to students who aspire to achieve what you have?

Since when I was little, I have gone all in on my interests. When I was interested in rocks, I would dig them up for hours, read books, and find information online. When it was narwhals, I was thrilled to get a textbook for Christmas. My love for computers taught me that I enjoy picking things apart and problem solving, which is what led me to engineering. Follow your interests, and find ways to learn through them.

What would you like people to know about you and your school career?

I've taken pride in my work and would like to represent Green County well.

Etta Sheehan

Etta Sheehan

Etta Sheehan is the daughter of Jessica and Jason Robinson. She plans to become a librarian and hopes to publish poetry one day.

Every successful person has people who influenced and supported them. Who would you like to give credit for helping inspire you, and what did they do to help you achieve as highly as you have?

I'd credit my best friend, Leena, as my biggest supporter and inspiration. She's always had my back and is there for me every time I need her. I wouldn't be here if not for her. I'd also like to credit my favorite poet, Ocean Vuong, for inspiring me to write and share my poetry.

What were the biggest obstacles you had to overcome to achieve as highly as you have?

The biggest challenges I've faced have been my anxiety, depression, and identity issues.

With success comes responsibility as a role model to those who follow you. What advice would you say to students who aspire to achieve what you have?

Find your family. Find the people who will have your back and love you no matter what, because family is more than blood. Never listen to the people who hate just to hate. You matter more than anything you can give or do; you matter because you exist.

What would you like people to know about you and your school career?

I've always tried my hardest.

Jessa Sidebottom

Jessa Sidebottom is the daughter of Kristina Rutledge & Mark Sidebottom. She plans to attend Lindsey Wilson University and major in Psychophysiology on a Pre-Physical Therapy track.

Jessa Sidebottom

Every successful person has people who influenced and supported them. Who would you like to give credit for helping inspire you, and what did they do to help you achieve as highly as you have?

My biggest inspirations in life have been my family, and specifically my parents. They have always pushed me to be the absolute best version of myself, but they've always shown up for me and supported me in everything I do, too. I also would like to give credit to some of the coaches that I've been under in my high school experience. They taught me what it means to show up for others even on a bad day. They also taught me grit and determination in the face of adversity, which is also something I will take with me through life.
