

Kindergartners Take Some Time Out For Barnesville

Time Out Barnesville was selected as the basis for the annual Street Light publication. This special section is dedicated to the community and area residents of Barnesville.

With that in mind, the Record-Review has asked a few young residents who attend kindergarten at Barnesville Elementary School to share the activities they enjoy doing around their community.

These very active residents of Barnesville are always se arcing out things to do in the community. It is important for people to know their perspective on what keeps them engaged. Barnesville is a great place to call home and the following words of wisdom shared by these young learners is something all readers need to know.

The Record-Review wants to thank the teachers and students for taking time out of their busy day to teach us how important the small and big things in our community are to everyone lucky enough to call Barnesville home.

Megan Martin's kindergarten class enjoying some "time out" activites during their busy day.

These kindergartners in Shari Grabow's class were excited to share their "time out" activites with everyone.

This group of students in Chris Messer's room definitely know the meaning of taking some "time out" to enjoy their day.

Taking "time out" from a hard day of learning, Allison Willers' class spent some time at the park.
