

Three Sheets in The Wind . . . by Mary

I simply cannot believe it. Over the weekend, in the vast world of worthless television, there were really great things to watch. The Olympics, the Super Bowl (not for me), and "All Creatures Great and Small." At last, I looked forward to chasing down the remote and hitting the "on" button. My favorite was the team ice skating, but I also caught some speed skating and some skiing. About that skiing, if I ever managed to crawl to the top of a mountain, I would look for a better way down than 80 miles an hour with sleds tied to my shoes. How do they do it?

I've been watching the Olympics for as long as it has been provided on local TV. I remember as far back as Peggy Fleming who skated to gold in a white dress. It was a simple costume unlike the glitter and glam of the outfits today. It also "covered" a lot of skin. I saw Dorothy Hamill do the first ever "Hamill camel" spin that has become a mainstay in competition over the years. Scotty and Brian brought home gold and continued to entertain with tours and TV appearances. And in more recent games, we've been introduced to all manner of snow sports and remarkable speed from the sleds to the skates to the skis.

After my daily viewing of the Olympics I took a little break. I watched the half time show for the Super Bowl, not particularly because I wanted to see Bad Bunny, but because I always try to watch just to see what all the excitement is about. Bad Bunny has a great voice, but truthfully I didn't understand much of what he was singing. That's not unusual for me. I couldn't understand the Rolling Stones and I know the words to their songs. I couldn't understand the rappers, because I'm just not fast enough to keep up with what they were rapping about.

There is always a lot of hype about the Super Bowl commercials, but I am not proud to admit, I don't always get the joke. I did manage to pick out some of the celebrities who appeared, but, as has become the normal for me, I only knew the "old" familiar performers who have been around a few years.

Because I had it recorded from earlier in the evening, it was finally time. As I said, I watched "All Creatures Great and Small" on our local PBS, Channel 47, WTVP. Not much to say, except, IT'S GREAT! This is a fantastic series about a trio of veterinarians in England in the 1940's. Years ago, I read the entire series of books by James Herriot, the vet who actually wrote the books from his own experience with the Farner brothers. The books are a very good read, but the TV series brings to life these wonderful people, the family, the local townspeople, the farmers, and most important, the animals who are treated and loved. I repeat, it's great!

Our local PBS, Channel 47 has had a struggle the last few years, and more problems now with a cut in Federal funding. It scares me because this is the channel that provides hours of entertainment, with little and no commercials. I found Downton Abbey, Call the Midwife, Poldark, all of Ken Burns documentaries, the Antiques Road Show, America's Test Kitchen, and on and on, bringing me to this current season of All Creatures Great and Small, every Sunday. Did I mention, it's great!
